Biography

Anatoly Slivko was born on December 28, 1938 in the Dagestan city of Izberbash . The newborn received a birth injury: he was strangled by the umbilical cord. The consequences of this injury later negatively affected Slivko, he suffered from headaches all his life, and in adolescence he developed personality traits that psychiatrists call epileptoid or organic psychopathy . Such people have a "viscous" psyche, they tend to get stuck on some traumatic event for a long time [4] .

He did not feel much attraction to the opposite sex, although he met girls. He got a job in Nevinnomyssk at the Azot enterprise , where he worked with youth, organized a tourist club called CHERGID (Through rivers, mountains and valleys), was accepted into the CPSU . He married, however, despite having two children, he paid little attention to his wife. He was a pioneer leader in pioneer camps. He was engaged in amateur photography and filming. In addition to membership in the CPSU, he was an honored school teacher of the RSFSR (1977), a shock worker of communist labor, a deputy of the Nevinnomyssk City Council, a master of sports in mountain tourism .

In 1961, he witnessed a road accident in which a drunk motorcyclist crashed into a column of pioneers, seriously injuring one of them. The pioneer died on the spot. At the same time, Slivko experienced sexual arousal, which he later sought to repeat, reproducing individual details of the incident. Slivko remembered another episode from his childhood: in 1942, while living under German occupation , Slivko witnessed the murder of a little boy by a policeman, who, after the murder, wiped his shoe from the boy's blood [3] . Also, one episode from childhood was forever imprinted in Slivko's memory: once, when he and his friends were playing "partisan", he, as a captured partisan, was hung on a tree, from which he lost consciousness [3] .

Murders

He found victims, mostly boys, among the members of the children's tourist club, which he led. Possessing a good intuitive knowledge of child psychology, he quickly subordinated them to his will - involved in the filming of "adventure films" associated with both imitation and direct violence. These films were popular in the schools of the city and were welcomed by the party leadership. For faults (violation of the club's charter), financial penalties were imposed on children, which they offered to atone for by participating in a "secret experiment".

In June 1963, Slivko invited the fifth grader to take part in filming. Taking the boy to the forest, he played scouts with him, then offered "a serious test of endurance." The boy agreed. Slivko tied Nikolai to the trees by the arms and by the neck, and he pulled the rope tied to his legs over himself (he called this "stretching"). Then he asked the boy to portray torment and suffering (writhing, kicking, etc.). All this was carefully recorded on film [4] .

In total, 40 members of his club participated in such experiments of Slivko, which over time became more and more dangerous and cruel. The maniac dressed the boys in pioneer uniforms, stretched them on ropes, hung them on a tree, observed torment and convulsions, after which he carried out resuscitation. The surviving victims either did not remember what happened or were afraid to talk about it. Nobody believed the children, who nevertheless told about everything.

In 1964, Slivko was unable to revive 15-year-old Nikolai Dobryshev. He dismembered his body and dumped the remains into the Kuban River . In 1973, Slivko strangled 15-year-old Alexander Nesmeyanov. This murder, as well as subsequent ones, was already committed by Slivko on purpose.

In total, as a result of Slivko's "weakness", which he treated more and more condescendingly, at least 7 boys under the age of 16 were killed. He shot the murders and the subsequent dismemberment of corpses on film, kept a diary. These materials served as direct evidence against the maniac. He was distinguished by pyromania and a pathological fetishism for shoes - he sawed or burned the shoes of the children he killed.

Arrest, investigation and trial

Despite the stories and testimonies of the pupils of the tourist club, the investigation into the cases of the disappearance of children who went to "film shooting" lasted more than ten years. Maniak was arrested only on December 28, 1985 at the request of the assistant prosecutor Tamara Vasilievna Languyeva [5] . During January and February 1986, Slivko confessed to all the murders. The investigation was short-lived, as there was plenty of evidence in the form of filmed films and photographs. The trial of Slivko took place in June 1986. He was sentenced to death and shot by court order on September 16, 1989 in the Novocherkassk prison. A few hours before the execution, he gave advice to the investigator Issa Kostoev , who is leading the case of another serial killer - Andrei Chikatilo. True, he did not help him in any way, since all his recommendations turned out to be erroneous [6] .
